PREFACE.

THE collection of books here briefly described formed part of the Library of the late Mr E. J. W. Gibb, whose premature death on December 5, 1901, at the age of forty-four, deprived the world of the greatest authority on the Ottoman Turkish language and literature whom Europe has produced since the time of Sir James Redhouse. Mr Gibb's valuable collection of Turkish, Persian and Arabic manuscripts was bequeathed by the will which he made at the time of his marriage in 1889 to the British Museum, but the disposal of his printed books was left entirely to the discretion of his widow, whose generous desire it was that they should be placed where they were most likely to be of use in promoting those studies to which her husband's life was devoted. Accordingly, reserving for herself and the immediate friends of her husband a comparatively small selection of these books, she divided the remainder into two parts, of which the first, consisting of works on Turkey and the Nearer East written in some European language, was presented to the library of the British Embassy at Constantinople, while the second, comprising books written in Turkish, Arabic and Persian, together with a certain number of dictionaries and other works, was bestowed on the Cambridge University Library. The gift wherewith our Library is thus enriched is not merely valuable in itself, but appropriate and memorable: appropriate, because it was this University which some twenty years ago honoured Turkish scholarship by conferring on Sir James Redhouse the degree of Doctor in recognition of his great services to this branch of Oriental Studies, and because here only in this country is regular instruction given in the Turkish language; memorable, because this generous gift is the first recognition from outside the University of the efforts which are now being made in the University to take away from this country the reproach of having no practical School of Living Oriental Languages.

The books in this collection fall into three main classes, namely, Turkish texts, Persian and Arabic texts, and books of European authorship on these and other kindred languages and literatures. Of these three classes the first is by far the most important. Its importance lies in the fact that, though most branches of Turkish literature are represented, it is especially rich in poetry and belles lettres (edebiyât), including the writings of the New School which began to develop about the year 1859, and which has so entirely revolutionized the canons of taste, style and literary form which dominated all the preceding period. Mr Gibb's library was, indeed, formed with a special object, namely, to supply all the requisite materials for his exhaustive History of Ottoman Poetry, of which only the first volume appeared in his lifetime, and of which I have since brought out three more volumes from the materials he left¹. For this particular purpose, therefore, the present collection is admirably adapted, since neither trouble nor expense was spared to make it as complete as possible.

As regards the second and third classes of books, they are of much less importance. Of the Persian and Arabic texts, which to the non-Orientalist librarian or cataloguer present the same difficulty as the Turkish, since they have as a rule no European title-page, it was obviously desirable to append a list ; and finally, after consideration, I decided to include also (with the exception of a few unimportant tracts) the books which constitute the third class, though all of these have at least a title-page in some European language, and can therefore be dealt with in the ordinary way and entered in the General Catalogue, which, indeed, should be done forthwith, as they are precisely the books which the young student of Turkish is most likely to need. And I know that I voice the donor's wish when I express a very earnest hope that all the books in this collection may be freely accessible to students, and especially undergraduate students, of Turkish and Persian, not only within the Library, but outside its walls. That our Library may ever continue to be what it has been in the past, one of the most generous and most accessible libraries in this country, must be the heart-felt desire of all who regard the interests of learning.

In the following list I have arranged the Turkish, Persian and Arabic books according to the alphabetical order of their titles. This is, in my opinion, by far the most convenient plan, and it is, moreover, the plan adopted by the great Turkish bibliographer Hájji Khalífa, whom in this particular I follow without hesitation or misgiving. I have, however, appended an Index of authors' names whereby anyone can easily ascertain what writers are represented, and by what works. The question of transliteration has, as usual, proved troublesome, for the Turkish phonetic system is ill represented by the Arabic alphabet, and a considerable modification of the transcription adopted for Arabic and Persian is almost inevitable, especially in the case of the vowel-sounds, which are much more numerous in Turkish¹. In the Turkish names and titles, therefore, not only the vowels a, á, í, í, u and ú, but also e, o, and ü, at any rate, are required. As regards the consonants, ث (th), س (s) and ص (ṣ) are all pronounced alike as s; the first I here represent by ṣ̣, the second by s and the third by ṣ̣. So likewise ذ (dh), ز (z), ض (ḍ) and ظ (ḍh) are all pronounced by Turks and Persians as z: the first and second I here represent without distinction by z, the third by ṣ̣, and the fourth by ṣ̣. Of the remaining letters, it is only necessary to say that the consonantal و (w) is commonly pronounced v in Turkish, and that ح, ع, ق and ك (ṣághir kef, or ṣághir nún) are represented by h, ' , q and n̂.

204 ظفر نامه شرحی (c)

The Commentary on the Zafer-námé. This Zafer-námé is a celebrated political satire on the Grand Vezír 'Álî Pasha, containing an ironical account of his expedition against Crete in 1867, really by Ziyá Pasha, one of the founders of the New Turkish School, but ascribed by him to Fázil Pasha the Bosnian, then mutaşarríf, or governor, of Izmid. This Zafer-náme was expanded by the author into a Takhmís, or

"Fivesome," which he ascribed to Khayrî Efendi, a retired officer of the Quarantine Department, another of the Grand Vezîr's partisans, while the whole was explained, still by Zîyâ Pasha, in this absurd commentary, which is supposed to be the work of Hüsni Pasha, the Grand Vezîr's Marshal of Police. The late Mr Gibb discusses this work very fully in the chapter which he devotes to Zîyâ Pasha in the fifth (still unpublished) volume of his History of Ottoman Poetry, and describes it as the last, and, indeed, the only true satire which exists in Ottoman literature. This copy was lithographed in London, without date, and contains 135 pp.

Having prepared the Catalogue of the Cowell books as far as No. 25, I was obliged to leave Cambridge for a few weeks. During my absence, my friend and colleague Mr R. A. Nicholson was kind enough to continue the work, so that of the last 79 articles 75 (Nos. 26—101, pp. 68—79) are his. For his valuable co-operation I desire here to express my sincere thanks.

The sizes of the first six books of the Cowell collection were unfortunately omitted. They are as follows : No. 1, 25 cm.; No. 2, 27 cm.; Nos. 3 and 4, 28 cm.; No. 5, 21 cm.; No. 6, 23 cm.
